

Department: History

Course Name: Advanced Placement World History Modern

Course Description:

This course is designed to offer each student the equivalent of an introductory college-level course in world history. Students will learn the analytical skills and factual knowledge necessary to understand how global processes and contacts developed in interaction with different types of human societies. It follows the major civilizations in Africa, the Americas, Asia, Europe, and Oceania from 1200 CE to the present. The course is organized according to these four periods of time in world history: regional and transregional interactions; global interactions; industrialization and global integration; and accelerating global change and realignments. Within each period, key concepts organize and prioritize historical developments. Themes allow students to make connections and identify patterns and trends over time.

Content:

Regional and Trans-regional Interactions, c. 1200 to c. 1450

Expansion and Intensification of Communication and Exchange Networks

Continuity and Innovation in State Forms and Their Interactions

Skills:

Participate in class and complete all assignments thoroughly

Develop and use the historical thinking skills: historical causation, patterns of continuity and change over time, periodization, comparison, contextualization, historical argumentation, appropriate use of relevant historical evidence, interpretation, and synthesis.

Use primary and secondary sources such as religious and political texts, images of architecture and art, and historical quantitative data to gather evidence for supporting written arguments (essays) about the similarities and differences between societies that developed in the same time period but in different parts of the world.

Analyze primary sources to compare the basis of leaders' claims to power and the effects of their rule, primary sources by and about political and religious leaders to practice identifying the purpose, point of view, and limitations of historical primary sources.

Use primary and secondary sources including historical data to analyze the causes and effects of conflicts.

Use primary and secondary sources to trace the patterns of development for imperial domination, expansion of trade routes, spread of belief systems, industrial mass production, and warfare; essays analyzing change and continuity as well as source-based assessments, similar to document-based questions, will require formal written arguments explaining changes and continuities.

Create annotated maps that show the changes and continuities in the five themes: effects of interactions on people and the environment, cause of the creation of new political systems, spread of agricultural developments and causes and effects of migrations.

Hone debate skills related to historical research (Harkness Discussions)

Keep a well-organized and complete binder for the entire year

Using various forms of technology for class work, homework, discussions and presentations (google documents, google folder, google slides, Keynote, Flipgrid, Padlet, Nearpod, Zoom, power point, prezi and other online applications)
